

lar to tequila but where mezcal can be made from over 30 types of agave plants, tequila can only come from the blue agave. Both are region specific like scotch or champagne. Most mezcals are indeed smoky and a wonderful addition to a cocktail, do not shy away from this distant cousin of islay scotch but forget whatever you heard about worms in a bottle, it's a gimmick.

Tequila meant pouring rounds of shots for friends who insist they can't handle it but laugh and drink anyway. Tequila meant being at a late night bar and acting with a kind of recklessness that can't really be afforded. More than any other spirit, just mentioning the word tequila inspires a certain untamed reaction. These tequila drink recipes that aren't margaritas or shots show the Mexican spirit in a different, and dare we say, more sophisticated light.

Rethinking an espresso martini but tequila in lieu of the classic vodka. A touch of cayenne gives a subtle bite to the mix - not so much to make this a spicy drink, just enough to be noticeable on the followthrough.

Wake the Dead

1 oz Coffee Liqueur
1 oz Espresso
Pinch of Cayenne

Shake all ingredients with ice and strain into a coupe glass. Garnish: Nutmeg

This drink calls for pistachio syrup, which can be bought or made by blending simple syrup with pistachios and straining. However the pistachio syrup can always be substituted with simple syrup, making a very delicious tequila sour.

0.5 oz Mezcal
1 oz Ginger Liqueur
1 oz Pistachio syrup (or Simple Syrup)
1 oz Lemon Juice

0.5oz Cocchi Vermouth di Torino
2 dashes Angostura bitters

.25 oz Mezcal
1 oz Maple syrup
1 oz Lime juice

Salt rim of glass. Combine all ingredients and shake with ice. Double strain into glass.

Vodka Shines Through

The vitality and strength of the category has been a bright light in dark times.

BY THOMAS HENRY STRENK

Note: This excerpt is printed with permission from the Fall 2021 issue of StateWays—the Beverage Alcohol Merchandising Magazine for Control States.

The behemoth vodka category survives and thrives—even during the pandemic—thanks to its versatility, mixability, and enduring popularity. At-home consumption spurred sales via takeout cocktails from bars and restaurants, and home mixologists stocking up on large-format bottles and mixers, aided by a loosening of regulations and boosted by e-commerce. As Covid restrictions ease and on-premise traffic revives, those factors will continue to drive growth, augmented by innovation, new flavors and expressions, and marketing. Producers, bars and restaurants, and retailers remain bullish on vodka.

“Vodka is still the most popular spirit category in terms of number of drinks sold. No question,” says Thomas Moore, divisional bar training manager at Aba, a Mediterranean concept in Chicago that opened another location in Austin this past October.

“It’s the number-one spirit in the United States, accounting for one-third of all cocktail sales nationwide,” says Martin de Dreuille, vice president global marketing for Grey Goose vodka. While pandemic lockdowns have decreased on-premise sales at bars and restaurants, “we’ve been fortunate to see spikes in sales from shops and liquor stores, which represent a significant portion of our North American sales, as well as unprecedented growth in e-commerce,” he notes.

“Our vodka SKU count is always growing due to new products and brands becoming available to our distributors,” says Shaina B. Jones, store manager at Sodie’s Wine & Spirits in Fort Smith, Arkansas.

Vodka consumption continues to be a massive driver in the spirits industry, says Erin King, director of brand marketing and on-premise for Western Son vodka. “With all the buzz about whiskey, tequila, and RTDs, sometimes vodka is a little forgotten, but vodka is still on every backbar and home bar and in every shopping basket. It's a staple."

Focused Approach

Although vodka is a workhorse at every bar and restaurant, some establishments specialize in the spirit. "Vodka is a foundational piece to our restaurant; it's tied to the concept and the culture of Eastern European dining," says Israel Morales, co-owner and beverage director of Kachka restaurant in Portland, Oregon. "We carry a good number of vodkas that are unique and hard to find, and in that way we have become a destination."

Cool and Creative

While most vodka is grain-based—corn, wheat, rye—or made from potatoes, vodka's lack of strict rules allow enterprising distillers wide latitude in distillates to create new and unexpected iterations. Good Liquor Works, for example, produces vodka from coffee pulp. Highway Vodka, hailing from Houston, is crafted from hempseed. Made from California grapes, Caveman Vodka claims to be "Paleo-inspired." In India, Smoke Lab distills vodka from basmati rice grown in the Himalayan foothills. In Louisiana, JT Meleck also produces Rice Vodka at a distillery surrounded by rice fields. Crystal Head last fall released Onyz, which is Weber blue agave-based and joins Crystal Head Original and Crystal Head Aurora, made from wheat.

Water also makes a difference in the final product. For example, Grey Goose sources pure spring water from its natural well in Gensac-la-Pallue, France. Finlandia vodka, distilled in the Finnish village of Koskenkorva, is made with pure glacial spring water and Suomi barley. Taking a different approach is Dirty Devil vodka, produced in Canada by St. Lucifer Spirits from non-GMO corn and hyper-oxygenated water.

Fruit Loops

The current "It" flavor seems to be pink lemonade, which is perhaps related to the mania for rosé wines and pink-hued gins. Sodie's top-selling vodka flavor at the moment is New Amsterdam Pink Whitney, says Shaina Jones.

Western Son's newest flavor is lemon. "We're excited to have a citrus in our portfolio, especially with citrus being 25 percent of the flavored vodka market share, it's important to play in that arena," King says.

The Grey Goose portfolio features a number of flavor expressions, including La Poire, L'Orange, and Le Citron. Deep Eddy Vodka earlier this year launched a lime-flavored expression, joining its lineup of Orange, Peach, Lemon, Ruby Red, Cranberry, and Sweet Tea. For the summer season, Absolut Vodka unveiled Absolut Watermelon.

Essence of Botanicals

A plethora of natural-flavor vodkas enhanced with botanicals have recently hit the market. Savayak Vodka last fall debuted Royal Botanical, a vodka from Belarus infused with 12 different spices and herbs. Grey Goose in April launched the Essences line, which includes three variations of vodka infused with real fruit and botanicals. Also in April, Pinnacle vodka unveiled the Pinnacle Light & Ripe innovation line. And in May, Belvedere announced the launch of Belvedere Organic.

Stocking Up and Trading Up

Large formats are selling like gangbusters in the off-trade. Housebound consumers stocked up in a big way last year and grabbed myriad mixers off the shelves as well. As people honed their at-home mixology skills during the pandemic, "consumers are definitely buying more mixers and garnishes with their vodka purchases to make cocktails at home," says Jones.

And consumers have been reaching higher on the shelves too. Revenue in the high-end premium vodka segment grew 10.7 percent, according to Distilled Spirits Council of the United States.

Back to the Bar

With on-premise opening up, bartenders are getting creative and reaching for vodka. "Vodka's stealthy persona and versatility in cocktail design makes for endless creative opportunities," says Jay Jones, lead bar development manager for Joey Restaurants. "Any vodka can be sipped, it depends on what sensation you're after," he adds.

People in Eastern Europe traditionally take shots of vodka with small bites of food, says restaurant co-owner Morales, and his customers eat and drink the same way. Kachka also has some pre-set vodka flights on the menu.

A Promising Outlook

"People are giving vodka, and more specifically, premium vodka, a second look," says Chuck Kane, chief operating officer of Chopin Imports. Chopin will stick with some tried-and-true traditional advertising, while beefing up its digital presence with the accelerated shift in internet usage and shopping.

Western Son leans heavily into digital to promote brand awareness, including influencer partnerships, says King. The company, which donates a portion of sales to the nonprofit Peter Burk's Unsung Hero Fund, launched Spiked Ice Fruit Infusions, a frozen novelty. "Innovation is key for a brand like ours," King adds.

Belvedere will continue its Made with Nature communications platform, says Allison Varone, vice president of emerging brands at Moët Hennessy, whose portfolio includes Belvedere vodka. "The expectation is that some habits formed during the pandemic will stick, where consumers will continue to prioritize high-quality, local ingredients and all-natural brands when making lifestyle choices."

Versatile, Mixable, Ever-Popular Vodka

Producers, distributors, bartenders, and retailers agree that tapping into the continuing interest in cocktails leads to increased sales of vodka. Keep on encouraging your customers to enjoy versatile, mixable vodka and flavored vodkas in refreshing, easy-to-make cocktails!

The Bitter End

ELLEN GOMORY

Known for its unique, bitter flavor and bright orange hue, Campari, whose invention predates the official formation of the country of Italy, is versatile and irreplaceable. Its strong, bittersweet flavor makes it ideal for pairing with sweeter liquors like bourbon and sweet vermouth; however, it is equally capable of standing on its own over rocks or in a Campari Spritz.

Campari was invented in 1860 by Gaspare Campari in Novare, Italy. It is made by infusing alcohol and water with herbs and fruit and was initially colored with carmine dye, a bright pigmented dye made from insects. Its bright hue remains one of its most defining characteristics today.

Originally conceived of as an aperitif to be sipped before a meal, Campari has also become a popular mixer featured in trendy cocktails like the Negroni, the Americano or the Campari Spritz. Whether standing alone or mixed in cocktail, Campari's sharp and distinctive flavor ensures that it always stands out.

The Negroni is Campari's most popular cocktail use. It combines Campari, gin, sweet vermouth and a twist of orange for a sharp, robust cocktail to be sipped before eating. The herb infused liquor is the perfect palate cleanser, priming the drinker for whatever meal is to come.

The Negroni may be the best-known use of Campari, but bourbon mixes like the "Boulevardier" give the negroni a run for its money. The Boulevardier is a twist on a classic Manhattan, combining Campari, bourbon and sweet vermouth and garnished with a lemon twist. When paired with bourbon, Campari's sharper notes are softened, and the two combine for a smooth, elegant cocktail experience.

With the rise in popularity of the "Aperol Spritz," Campari has also appreciated increased attention. The Campari Spritz, similar to the Aperol Spritz, is made by combining Campari, prosecco and soda water and can be found on many popular bar and restaurant menus, especially during the summer months. The Campari Spritz' slightly brighter, more bitter taste is perfect for a weekend brunch or a warm afternoon.

The Americano was the original inspiration for the Negroni and uses all of the same ingredients with the exception of gin. A lighter, more refreshing cocktail, the Americano is made simply with Campari, soda water and sweet vermouth.

It is easy to see why Campari remains Italy's most popular liquor. Sharp, smooth and bittersweet, Campari makes a fun addition to any bar shelf.

Cocktails

Americano

1½ ounces Campari
1½ ounces sweet vermouth
Club soda, to top
Garnish: orange twist

Fill a highball glass with ice, then add the Campari and sweet vermouth. Top with the club soda and stir gently to combine. Garnish with an orange twist.

Campari Spritz

2 ounces Prosecco or other sparkling wine
1 ounce club soda
2 ounces Campari
garnish: 1 large green olive, or 3 small olives on a pick

Fill rocks glass with ice. Add sparkling wine, club soda, and Campari. Stir gently. Garnish with olives.

Boulevardier

1½ ounces (3 tablespoons) bourbon whiskey
1 ounce (2 tablespoons) sweet or semi-sweet red vermouth
1 ounce (2 tablespoons) Campari
Ice, for serving
Orange peel, for garnish

Combine the bourbon whiskey, sweet vermouth, and Campari in a cocktail mixing glass (or any other type of glass). Fill the mixing glass with 1 handful ice and stir continuously for 30 seconds. Add ice to a lowball glass and strain the drink into the glass (or you can use a cocktail glass without ice). Use a knife to remove a 1 wide strip of the orange peel. Squeeze the orange peel into the drink to release the oils. Gently run the peel around the edge of the glass, then place it in the glass and serve.

Smokey Negroni

1¼ ounces mezcal
1¼ ounces Campari
1¼ ounces sweet vermouth
Orange twist, for garnish

Stir all liquid ingredients with ice. Strain into chilled rocks glass filled with ice. Garnish with an orange twist.
